

Attribution Guide

Your organisation's license agreement with Thomson Reuters ("License") details how you can use Westlaw UK, Westlaw International, Westlaw Gulf, Lawtel or Practical Law ("Information").

We want you to use Information freely for your organisation's business subject to us protecting our own business and the ownership rights in the Information.

This guide helps you understand when you need to attribute Thomson Reuters as the source of the Information that you send to third parties. It should be read in conjunction with our Usage FAQs which helps to explain when you may send Information to third parties.

If you are in any doubt about how Information should be attributed to us, please contact your organisation's Account Manager.

General Guide

You must ensure that all Information that you send to others both inside and outside your organisation attributes Thomson Reuters as the source.

If you are sending Information within your organisation in a format that does not already identify us as the source you need to add the words:

Source: Thomson Reuters

Sending Information outside Your Organisation

If you intend to send Information outside your organisation, it must bear one of the following attributions:

(i) If published un-amended:

"This [e.g. article] was originally published on [e.g. on www.practicallaw.com on [date]] and is reproduced with the permission of Thomson Reuters."

(ii) If Information is amended:

"This [e.g. article] incorporates material originally published on [e.g. www.westlaw.co.uk on [date]] and is reproduced with the permission of Thomson Reuters.

Or

"This [e.g. article] is based on a report first published on [e.g., www.westlaw.co.uk on [date]] and is reproduced with the permission of Thomson Reuters.

(iii) If the Information published on our web site is attributed to a third party contributor, the author should be attributed as follows: "by X of ABC firm."

Know-how Exception

We do not expect you to acknowledge Thomson Reuters as the source of any:

- ✓ Standard document or clause used in your work product produced in the ordinary course of your organisations business
- ✓ Of our daily/weekly/monthly update e-mails (current awareness) used in your organisation's own updating or current awareness service provided to clients. This exception does not apply if the service is provided by a third party.
